WHAT YOU MISSED IF YOU WERE ABSENT

Two law officers from Waterloo, who are assigned to Regional Information Sharing Systems program gave us an inside look at what is happening, post 9/11 in the field of information gathering.

They are going to focus on a partnership with local businesses and residents to act as Eyes and Ears in their everyday activities, to feed suspicious acts to the local law enforcement agency, who in turn forward the information to the RISS agency serving their area.

This information will be logged into computers and analyzed by experts to determine the value of the information.

The key to success will be the ability to share information across jurisdictions and agencies. The events leading up to 9/11 were known to some law enforcement agencies, but the information did not pass on to others, therefore the big picture was not painted.
